

eabh. HISTORY MATTERS.

eabh supports research into all aspects of banking, insurance and financial history, from the earliest innovations in the middle-ages to developments since the industrial revolution and in the present.

eabh also maintains a European network of professionals and academics with the aim of strengthening the understanding of banking and finance. In so doing, we contribute to the effective management of the European financial sector and consequently its international competitiveness.

eabh primarily focuses its support on two distinct groups of people: The first consists of its member organisations, which include banks, insurance companies and financial institutions. This group benefits from eabh conferences and publications, which offer an opportunity to learn from the past in order to deal successfully with the challenges of the present.

The second group to benefit from the work of eabh consists of archivists and historians active in the field of banking and financial history. In order to support the present-day financial sector, it is necessary to maintain an accurate, accessible, and relevant record of past activities and experiences. Through conferences, workshops and publications, eabh supports the art of the archivist, and in so doing supports the circulation of sound information, upon which decisions about present challenges can be made.

PUBLICATIONS

Financial History Review (FHR)

eabh's renowned Financial History Review is published by Cambridge University Press (CUP) as an international forum for scholars interested in banking, finance, and other monetary matters. The journal offers a wide variety of peer-reviewed articles which focus on different cultural and social aspects and raise political and financial concerns of different regional and international affairs. Both theoretical and technical approaches add value to the compilation. Each volume also contains a review section and an annual bibliography.

FHR Bibliography

Since its comprehensive archive and the yearly bibliography comprise indispensable research material for every specialist of banking and financial history, CUP and eabh have established an online platform which provides access to the rich content of FHR articles. The search tool also offers references to other corresponding literature.

Studies in Banking and Financial History

This eabh series is currently published in successful cooperation with different academic publishers or alternatively in cooperation with a renowned member institution. With releasing both monographs and conference proceedings, the series is committed to international academic standards and focuses on different aspects of banking, insurance, and financial history.

Bank and Financial Archives Series

With the Bank and Financial Archives Series, eabh releases remarkable eabh-workshop proceedings in order to enhance research into the profession and importance of archiving.

bulletin

Twice a year eabh publishes the bulletin – Newsletter from eabh. This comprehensive and informative publication provides a forum for new studies, research, and events related to the fields of banking, financial, and insurance history.

eabh Papers NEW

eabh launches its new working papers series eabh Papers in 2014, giving scholars in banking, financial, business, and economic history and related fields a platform to distribute their research-in-progress. Making these findings available to a wider audience, even at an early stage, supports authors' search for qualified feedback, makes their work visible to international audiences, and increases their research's impact. These are important steps towards publication in a top-ranking scientific journal.

ALFF: ARCHIVAL LEGISLATION FOR FINANCE

Understanding our times increasingly depends on the preservation of financial records. Authentic and reliable memory systems are needed to understand current crises and to evaluate risks. Reliable memory systems can only be created through knowing and understanding how corporations manage their archives in practice and what the organisational system is for doing so. Safeguarding the records of our financial institutions will improve the protection of global financial stability. For that reason, this project began in 2012 with the objective to collect information about the best practices of financial institutions in building and improving their archives. Therefore, we have developed a survey to collect data about the current framework of European financial institutions' archival systems.
