

Papal Banking in Reanissance Rome – Benvenuto Olivieri and Paul III, 1534-1549

The Author

Francesco Guidi Bruscoli has become a senior research fellow at the History Department of Queen Mary, after he had joined the Borromei Bank Research Project in 2002. Meanwhile, he is also a researcher at the Faculty of Economics at the University of Florence in Italy. Studying in Italy and London, Bruscoli obtained his PhD in Economic History at the University of Bari. His thesis A Florentine banker in Rome during Paul III's Pontificate (1534-1549): Benvenuto Olivieri won the Young Scholars Prize of the European Association for Banking and Financial History (EABH) e.V. in 1999. Bruscoli's main research interests focus on the activity of Italian merchant bankers between 1400 and 1600, particularly investigating the network of Italian merchants, who often constituted the main link between different areas of the continent.
